

Role-playing litter along the highway

Please do me a favor. If you create a website and then decide not to maintain it site, have the site removed. Believe me it will be a big hassle to close the site. Multiple emails, live help, and possibly a phone call will be involved but please close the site. We thank you in advance.

Dead links, broken links, and outdated websites cause me headaches constantly! It seems every time I wander the role-playing sites listed on search engines I end up wandering through a ghost town of dead and outdated novelty sites. I'm calling these site novelties because once the exuberance of role-playing wears off for whatever reason, the site goes dead! Don't get me wrong I'm not talking about the page 1 sites from the search engines. I'm talking about those found on page 2 or higher. In this wasteland I find myself following a certain survival code to get by. I don't generally visit any sort of free webspace sites, not dot.edu sites, or gaming companies that don't own their own domain name.

I don't like pop ups, unless I've requested it, I don't like animation, if you have substance on your page you don't have to distract your reader, I don't like sound, my cd player is working fine, and last but not least stop using those silly little java applets, just because you have them on hand doesn't mean you should use it.

David